Awaiting confirmation signals

Market performance

After four consecutive weeks of correction, the market reversed and grew again. However, this momentum came mainly from a few large-cap stocks such as VIC and VHM.

Chart: Awaiting confirmation signals

The long-term uptrend faces a challenge, as the VN-Index repeatedly crosses the 50-period and 100-period moving averages. This is a negative technical signal that suggests investor sentiment has turned cautious.

However, last week the index produced a positive signal with a mid-week breakout session. This signal followed a two-week accumulation phase, which points to a possible reversal. Notably, the index moved above the 10-period moving average.

Because these signals lack consistency, further confirmation is needed to determine whether the next trend will be upward or downward. This week, the 1,750-point zone should serve as strong short-term support, while the 1,800–1,850 point zone should serve as strong resistance.

→ The signals remain inconsistent. Although the breakout session points to a possible reversal of the short-term downtrend, investors should wait for additional confirmation signals before reopening new positions.

Technical strategy: Prepare to open new positions

In this situation, investors should observe the market carefully and wait for confirmation signals before reopening new positions.
