Awaiting the next signal

VN30 performance

The VN30Index recorded its second consecutive session of correction, declining 0.32% to close at 2,002 points. Selling pressure emerged across several stocks, including GAS (-2.59%), LPB (-2.11%), PLX (-1.75%), GVR (-1.52%), SAB (-1.44%), VPL (-1.38%), VIB (-1.20%), VNM (-1.08%), and MWG (-1.00%). On the other hand, buying demand appeared in VJC (+2.01%), HDB (+1.32%), and SSI (+0.92%).

VN30 Future chart: Awaiting the next signal

Market sentiment remained cautious, as evidenced by the appearance of a second small-bodied candle. However, this does not represent a negative signal, given that the contract still found support around the 50-period moving average and liquidity continued to improve.

The contract closed above key moving averages, including the 10-, 20-, 50-, and 100-period lines. This confirms that the uptrend remains intact over the short term. Therefore, a breakout session is needed to confirm the next trend direction.

In the upcoming session, the previous peak zone from early May 2026 will serve as strong resistance, at the 2,060-2,080 point range. Meanwhile, the strong support zone lies within the 1,900-2,000 point range, which coincides with the short-term moving averages.

Technical strategy

The uptrend remains confirmed over the short term, supported by improved liquidity. However, traders should wait for a confirmation signal before reopening Long positions, as caution in investor sentiment persisted through the final session of last week.
